

My name is Jason Hancock. I have lived out in West Corinne for a little over ten years. I married my wife Brandy shortly after moving here. Together we have five children and two grandkids. Ten years ago I was asked to move up here to help manage and run the farm side of Noosun Dairy. At the time I had no idea what I was getting myself into as I was never raised in agriculture. Looking back this move would prove to be a wonderful blessing. There is nothing like raising a family in the country or at least what is left of it here in Northern Utah.

I was born and raised down in West Point. I remember my grandfather owning a small dairy and running around causing any mischief we could growing up. After high school I decided to venture out from home joining the Marine Corps just before my 20th birthday. I served in the Marines from 2004-2008 where I was able to travel and meet people and experience different walks of life. After the Marines, I attended college and received my Bachelors in Logistics Management and somehow ended up being a Dairy Farmer. It is interesting, the different directions this life has in store for us.

I believe I am a strong candidate to be considered as a board member. I understand things in this world are changing fast. I am not naive to this nor to the fact that we as agriculture producers face challenges with our growing population in the future. I do believe that we, in a way hold the keys to help manage it for controlled growth. I have a strong belief we need to do everything possible to preserve the way of life we have here for our kids and grandkids. I am open minded and willing to learn and relate to others opinions but also strong enough to stand up for what I believe to be true.
